Ms. Anupama Jha, Executive Director of Transparency International addressed the students of ITMU Law School on the issue of corruption in India. Ms. Jha has decades of experience fighting against corruption, first as a journalist, later as an activist and presently as a member of the Transparency International India chapter. In the course of the lecture, Ms. Jha explained the functioning and work of Transparency International and the manner in which statistics is being collected and statistical analysis is carried out. She also emphasized on the utility of the Right to Information Act in weeding out the menace of corruption prevalent in India. The students of ITMU Law School made maximum use of this rare opportunity by getting insights into actual real life experiences narrated by Ms. Anupama Jha as she recounted the problems faced by Transparency International in ensuring highest credibility to their reports. On completion of the lecture, an interactive session was held whereby students raised pertinent doubts and sought clarifications on a wide range of matters including filing of applications under the Right to Information Act, role of the student community as well as awareness of law in combating corruption.
